portant. In fact so important was the evidence of Apua, that it was decided to issue a subpoena, immediately, for Bishop Woolley and other elders of the Mormon church. Apua's confession is tantamount, almost, to an admission that the laws of the Mormon church are to be regarded as paramount to all other laws, and that certain proceedings of the church are not to be divulged even in a court of law.

Apua testified that there had been a church trial of Kekauoha and the young woman, and both had confessed their guilt. This trial had been held for the purpose of settling the case quietly and keeping the affair of the church inside of the knowledge of the congregation. The witness admitted that his idea of the rules of the church, were that he nor anybody was permitted to reveal any thing that had occurred at that trial or any such trials. They could not reveal the happenings, even in a court of justice. But the witness, said he had been put in the stand under oath to tell the truth, and he proposed to tell the truth. An objection was made against the introduction of this evidence on the ground, that it was a privileged communication.
